You will note that the people are all well-dressed ladies and gentlemen, clean, courteous and distinguished in appearance, as befits the character of the exhibition of which they are proud to be servants. All these things mean something, and you who patronize these shows will observe that this high quality prevades the entire institution, down to the smallest detail. TURKISH RUSE
PROVES SUCCESS

Approach Russian Port Flying
Russ Flag, Suddenly Changes
Flags and Opens Hostilities.

London, July 6, 11:30 a. m.—Dispatches from St. Petersburg, a Russian port on the Black sea forwarded from Petrograd by a correspondent of Reuter, say the former German cruiser Breslau, now renamed the Midulla in the Turkish naval service, approached St. Petersburg several evenings ago flying the Russian flag. Subsequently she hoisted the Turkish flag, stopped a transport loaded with supplies and sank a sailing vessel.

Off Vardar she completed the destruction of a transport which had been torpedoed on the previous day by a Turkish submarine.

THE MIRACLE OF FAITH

Without, dry heat, a brassy glare and the clanging rush and bustle of metropolitan traffic. Within, the cool, sweet dusk, fragrant of flowers and incense, of the vast, dimly lighted cathedral. At regular intervals a splash of soft color from the tall stained glass windows. Far in front the red gleam of the silver lamp swinging before the high altar, the twinkling radiance of candles at subsidiary shrines.

Well toward the back, kneeling, faces turned beseechingly toward the chancel, a young and poorly dressed couple. The woman weeps openly, the man would weep if alone.

Presently the woman whispers; the man, in response, draws some loose silver from his pocket, scans its pitiful paucity, shakes his head in apologetic deprecation. The woman catches the hand that would slip the money from sight.

"But the baby may die!" she reminds him.

The man yields, sighing, and she chooses a coin.

Up the long aisle she steals, kneels before the high altar, passes to the altar of Mary—Mary, herself a mother a mother bereaved. The coin falls, tinkling, to its place; the woman's face gleams whitely in the glow of the newly lighted candle. It sinks into shadow as she again kneels for a moment of tense supplication. When the man, clutched by bitterest grief, senses her return she looks like a new creature.

"Come along, dear," she smiles calmly. "The baby is going to be better. I want to be there when he wakes up."
